

ABSTRACT OF THE INVENTION

A system and method are described for analyzing the performance of a network while processing an application. The method involves measuring and calculating the amount of time nodes are active processing and sending frames, as well as the amount of time that frames spend traversing the network. Graphical user interfaces are provided to effectively present significant measurements and calculations.